the full title of statesmanship. His has been a stormy career, and contemporary judgments of it will not be a safe one. He became a national character soon after he took his place in the Senate in 1881. The Democratic party had pulled itself together after its defeat of 1880, and was hopeful of repeating its victory, claimed in 1876. It needed a candidate and a manager. The leader must be one who would be able, if he won a victory, to conserve its results. He must not permit the experience of Tilden to be repeated.

carried his tariff fight to the Senate. He was the chief of that triumvirate of Democratic Senators who stood with the Republicans against the Wilson bill till it had been reorganized to meet their demands—demands so abborrent to the spirit in which Cleveland and Wilson had wished to revise the tariff that Cleveland did not sign the bill, but let it become law without signature, and denounced it as utterly inadequate. Gorman had won again, but it was a costly victory for his party and for himself.

The year 1890 came with Republicans in power and determined to pass the force bill. Gorman engineered the great fight against them; a fight as long as that of the present session on the rate bill, and perhaps the most recent Senatorial contest fairly to be compared with the great struggle of this year. Gorman won again.

damned the Democratic party more than once before 1994.

In his last great fight, Gorman was overwhelmingly defeated. He demanded the Poe amendment to the Maryland constitution, disfranchising the colored race in the State. It was voted upon only last fall, and the defeat, by a tremendous vote, could not have falled to wrench the grasp of a strong man on the party helm. Gorman was no longer strong. He was in ill health, and there was little apparent prospect for his improvement. Indeed, he never did improve afterward, save spasmodically. He had taken almost no part in the activities of the Senate the past session, and for many weeks before his death was confined to the Washington home in which he passed away. Before that his counsel had been rejected by his State, in the selection of Rayner for Senator.

In 1881 he entered upon his national career, receiving the nomination of his party for the United States Senate.

A boy in the Maryland public schools, a page in the Senate of the United States, member and speaker of the lower house of the Maryland Legislature, State Senator, and finally four times elected Senator of the United States. This is in very brief of the officeholding career of Arthur Pue Gorman; the skeleton around which he filled in a life time of activities, mainly related to public affairs in the widest national aspects. Mr. Gorman was a man destined to domination. He dominated the Legislature of his State when he was a member, and he early became dominant in his party's Senatorial force after he became a member of that body. He has been given wider credit, perhaps, than any other man, for the success of the came a member of that body. Politics His Life Work.

Mr. Gorman resolved, when he was a boy in the Senate, to be a Senator; to make public affairs a life work. He work has been given wider credit, perhaps, the many of them proved that the successful public man proved that the successful public man proved that the successful public man proved that the successful public man, whom in his teens; he was always a politician, for many years one of the greatest in the country. He took to the Cleveland movement, he made himself a power in the pre-convention and point State Senator Arthur Pue Gorman convention fights of 1884. There were jr., to succeed his father in the United self a power in the pre-convention and convention fights of 1834. There were some great veteran Democrats—the Thurmans, Carlisles, Bayards, Wilsons, Breckinridges, Morrisons—many of whom had small syn., thy with that judgment. But Gorman dominated them. His insight was accurate; his judgment was justified. By right of conquest he had gained the place of party leader, and he was made charman of the national committee. He managed the campaign and he elected Cleveland.

When the election was over, and the early performance of the post-convention days of 1876 ware repeated, both sides voeiferously claiming victory. Gorman did not make any of the mistakes of 1876. He did not allow his party to be beaten at any point. He stuck to his post and held his followers in line in all the doubtful States. He never wavered from his insistence that Cleveland had been elected, and that he would be sworn in as President.

That campaign marked the high tide of Gorman's career as a manager. He could win a victory, but he could not hold his party together for legislative achievement afterward. In 1888 he wanted the party to straddle on the fairif question, and he regarded the defeat of Cleveland in that year as a vindication. But it was a poor vindication in the light of what happened in 1892, when Cleveland was again nominated, the tariff declaration was made to suit him, and he was triumphantly elected.

His Break With Cleveland.

Army officers have held Congressional Maryland, Admiral Schley has always been known as a stanch Democrat, and was freely mentioned as being a possible candidate for the office of President of the United States, following the war of 1898. One possible hitch to his candidacy, it is pointed out, is the question whether he would be entitled to draw two salaries from the Government, his present salary as rear admiral of the navy, retired, being slightly in excess to that of a United States Senator.
